These include a full-function system, a home theater PC with AV receiver, and a home theater controller with AV receiver. The latter option is the easiest to build with the flexibility of being able to mix and match other components. This is a complex, and often expensive system, that can be very customizable. Full-function systems are generally the best option for home theater systems. However, there are several reasons why you would choose a home theater system with a home theater PC, which we will cover a little later on. There's no question that Apple would be best to approve the Kaby Lake chips in their A12X chips and the update for that reason. Ordered have not been shipped yet. Adobe has confirmed that they will be coming to devices sometime at the end of July. The previous generation devices are still using Kaby Lake and therefore won't be eligible for the update. At this point, the company has not released a date for the update. In addition to the more advanced keyboard shortcuts, the update also brings several tools to the table such as clone stamp and the new liquify tool. This new liquify tool is completely overhauled and now functions to a greater degree than the one in Photoshop Elements. Picking the colors from the new drop down palette is a welcome addition. Other changes include both an improved user interface and additional command-line scripting. The new version also includes a rather massive catalog of sweet-sounding brushes that Adobe will be adding to the software as well as several new features and tools. In addition, minor improvements to the painting tools and an updated splash screen round out the new version. Other than this, the CS5 version had completely new features such as blending modes and gradients, and as always, wholesale updates to where the app stands now. The new version also comes with several fixes and improvements. The new version is only for the CS6 (Mac) users, and this is version 3.0. For the CS6 installation of the app, make sure that you check the box when asked to "Upgrade to the latest version of Photoshop Elements."
